

open our eyes on common subjects.

Like the gnat, and his mission, it would be no trouble to make them up a public purse each summer to go away on. But they leave us to work out such insects to our satisfaction, which is not satisfactory or proper.

Some of the gnats that visit this section of Alabama at this season of the year, first walk about on powered cayenne pepper for a disinfectant, then soak their wings in a toughening substance that burns like high life when the eye is dusted with them.

The gnat will go away when you come all around getting him, but he is a good judge, and knows how far to go to get out of reach. He is right back and the only thing that will run him is the smoke from a cigarette. He is justifiable in such action, under the conditions and this shouldn't be held against him.

HERE'S WHERE WE BALK

Mr. Fuller has introduced a bill in the legislature to make it a penitentiary offense for an editor to carry whiskey advertisements.

Almost any good thing can be overworked.

Just because we may not want to hear the brayings of an ass in our back yard is no reason why he should be run off the planet and then a jail sentence be dealt the man who tells which way the animal went.

Whiskey is outlawed in Alabama, as it is in almost every other state, but that is no reason why an editor who wants to tell through his columns where some can still be found, should be hung and quartered and drawn, when he is in the publicity business, for a living.

Personally, the Dothan Eagle wouldn't be effected if the bill carried with it a life sentence for the editor who took whiskey ads, but that's no reason why we want a law put on the books taking from us that right. We believe in having a right to pass on the class of advertising that goes in our paper, and we think we are competent to judge.

The United States does not deny the brewers and distillers the right to the mails in sending out their letters and circulars, and when the government itself aids and abets in a business, surely the individual should be allowed the privilege of exercising his judgment in the matter.

We have stood square on every prohibition fight that came up, because we believe it's best for the majority of the people that whiskey be not sold in Alabama, but we seriously doubt the advisability of making such a fool law. It might cause a reaction that would turn sentiment the other way, and a law without a strong public sentiment to back it up, is a dead law, and if not repealed, it is overlooked.

WHY STAND YE IDLE?

The other day, while a country editor strolled through the public squares of the city of New York, and watched the thousands, "the great army of the unemployed," as they sat on the public seats and nodded and dreamed of a land of plenty, far, far away, he wondered why they tarried there idle all the day, when the farmers of the west are weeping and waiting for help to harvest their bumper crops, offering $2 to $4 a day for common laborers, with few takers.

The farmers of the great grain belt of the middle west, whose daughters are at home from the eastern seminaries, and whose sons are wearing Harvard and Yale colors in their hat bands, have money to spend in the harvesting, but they can't find the labor. They therefore work hard, and big sis, and bud and big sis don't mind giving up a few pleasure trips in their $4,000 touring car just to get the wheat in the bin before it rains.

At one time, when the west wanted money for handling the crops, it went to New York for it. It is now said that the west has the money at home, but sends east for tramp labor, or bright young men who want to go west long enough to smell the new mown hay, and raise a pink blister in the hands.

Within thirty days, the cotton fields of South Alabama would employ all the idle labor waiting to fall in the bread line, from Central Park, Bronx Park, Croton Park, Madison Square, Union Square and Washington Square combined, and if those people worked, they would make good money, the cotton would be housed before the "September storm," likely, which would save a cent a pound in grade, and fill thousands of hungry mouths and empty pockets, that will never be filled while hanging around New York city.

The little Battery boys and girls playing around the piers, eating rotten bananas and remnants of lunches pitched to them, look a good deal like the little boys and girls soon to be seen picking cotton in the fields of Houston county, but they don't look so strong, so healthy, and they don't laugh so heartily. In fact, the Country Editor couldn't remember to have heard any of them laugh. Come to think of it, they looked rather solemn and sad—wise beyond their years in some ways but ignorant as an infant. More in the real problems of life.

Stretch imagination's eye and put that drove of kids in an Alabama cotton field, along with a handful of picaninies, see them pick cotton, see them scamper for the volunteer watermelon with a week to it, found in a shady place, see them pack the cotton in a basket and turn "summersets" on the big pile, and see the brown red come into their cheeks from plenty of sunshine and fresh air and wholesome food—it would be a vision worth while.

Instead of that, you see in them more men to take the places of those who are now nodding on the seats in public parks, more women to take the places of those who work for $4 a week to meet a $6 expense account; you see in them more applicants for admission to the numerous charitable institutions which that city maintains for the fallen, the weak and enfeebled.

And the west offers good money for hands. And the south offers an ideal climate and good money for honest toil in her cotton plantations, while a thousand foreigners a day are dumped in New York, not knowing exactly where to find employment, but who think they have arrived in America when they step off at the piers.

Is there no one to tell them where to go?

Some mingle with the crowd in the parks, some go with the street cleaning crew. Some learn to drive trucks; some carry a bag, a few a pack on their backs filled with second hand goods; others push a fruit cart or get into sweat shops, and by working long hours, and Sundays, manage to eke out as much in a week as they could make in a couple of days in the grain belt of the middle west, or the cotton belt of the south—where all the air is just as good as new, and the food better than that which they smell while passing the swell hotels and cafes on Broadway.

There is work for all, if the people will go where it is.

DOUGHERTY BILL

accomplished by the commission jointly of government in towns and cities of certain size.

The proposed bill gives the people of each town or city desiring the same a chance to vote thereon, the majority deciding the matter. If at the end of four years the plan is not satisfactory the old plan, of aldermanic boards and ward representatives can be resorted to again.

A mass meeting has been called for Tuesday night and several hundred citizens will be present and listen to addresses on subjects bearing on the commission form of government. This mass meeting will likely provide the delegation that will go to Montgomery; anyhow it will shape the plans of operation of the lobbying at Montgomery.

FOR A SIMPLIFIED CALENDAR.

When Julius Caesar meddled with the calendar in true imperial fashion he produced "The Year of Confusion," which was 46 B. C. In that year were fifteen months or 445 days. A great many dates were lost which have never since been found. And the trouble came about necessitating the Gregorian revision of the calendar sixteen centuries later—through fighting with the new moon as with an auspicious influence according to a popular superstition.

The Julian occasion was by no means the last upon which moonshine and the calendar have collided. Another head-on meeting is now suggested by a San Francisco calculator, and while the moonshine in this case is figurative the proposition looks to a simple and material confusion of days. The idea is to have thirteen months of twenty-eight days each, with an "Anno Day" annexed to each December and "Midanno Day" in the exact middle of every leap year.

The originator of this calendar makes seventeen points for his calendar, including the fact that it causes every week, month and year to begin on Sunday and end on Saturday. Astronomical periods can be figured and dates set ahead. Existing anniversaries can be readjusted by mutual agreements. But if we do not hurry up and set the new calendar going with 1911 there will be no other chance till 1922.

Hating to pose among the rear-almorians of a strenuous age, we move, nevertheless, to refer the new-calendar idea to a joint commission of simplified spellers and set-the-clock-aheaders, with instructions to report not later than the silly season of 1923.—New York World.

A cruel paragrapher has announced that a Pennsylvania gambler lost a purse with $2,750, a deck of cards, a flask of whiskey, a pack of cigarettes, a Bible, and other things. Yes, and we have heard that even men who become addicted to the card habit could lose all this stuff, and even more. Bibles, therefore, might be expected to lose sometimes.
